

A New Zealand Company Takes it's Ergonomic Technology FREE into Schools

Editorial Media Release

August, 2007

Auckland based company Digi-Clik International wants to see every New Zealand School fitted out with it's range of ergonomic products FREE. The NZ company has purchased the international rights to the ErgoTouch products which are specifically designed to promote better posture in people when sitting at their computers, thus helping avoid Repetitive Strain Injuries (RSI) and/or Discomfort Pain and Injury (DPI).

The Company runs three online awareness programmes from their website including their Kidzsafe programme which has been specifically designed for Schools. All three assessment programmes are FREE and have all been designed to raise awareness of the hazards related to computer related RSI and DPI either in the Home, Schools and/or the Workplace.

The company is able to fit out Schools with it's product for free due to funding it obtains from both Corporate Sponsors and Charitable Trusts.

Company spokesperson Grendon Boynton warns that organisations like our schools and employers should seriously consider undertaking the free assessment programme as computer related RSI and DPI is still very much an unknown quantity with no real hard evidential statistics available to tell us the real extent of the problem. So if organisations / employers want to be in a safe position rather than a sorry one. An assessment programme like this can make all the difference in knowing how best to be covered against potential and looming injury claims.

The ErgoTouch products have proven to be very popular with many of our Senior Citizens and members of the SeniorNet Organisation. Many SeniorNet members use the ErgoTouch products to either help them recover from injuries or prevent aches and pains.

If you would like to learn more about these free online assessment programmes or this range of ergonomic products you can contact them on their FREECALL number 0800 ERGOTO (374 686) or visit their website at: www.ergotouch.co.nz

ErgoTouch is a Digi-Clik International Company which is a part of a group that is a resident at the Auckland International Centre of Entrepreneurship (ICEHOUSE), a government supported initiative that has been created specifically to back ideas that have the potential to increase NZ Exports.
